PLAYING FIELD

Founder of Level Playing Field, Coach Justin Monroe, has a vision to create a space where all athletes can level up their skills through high quality, state of the art training and sports access, without anything to stop them.

Imagine a Level Playing Field for all athletes...

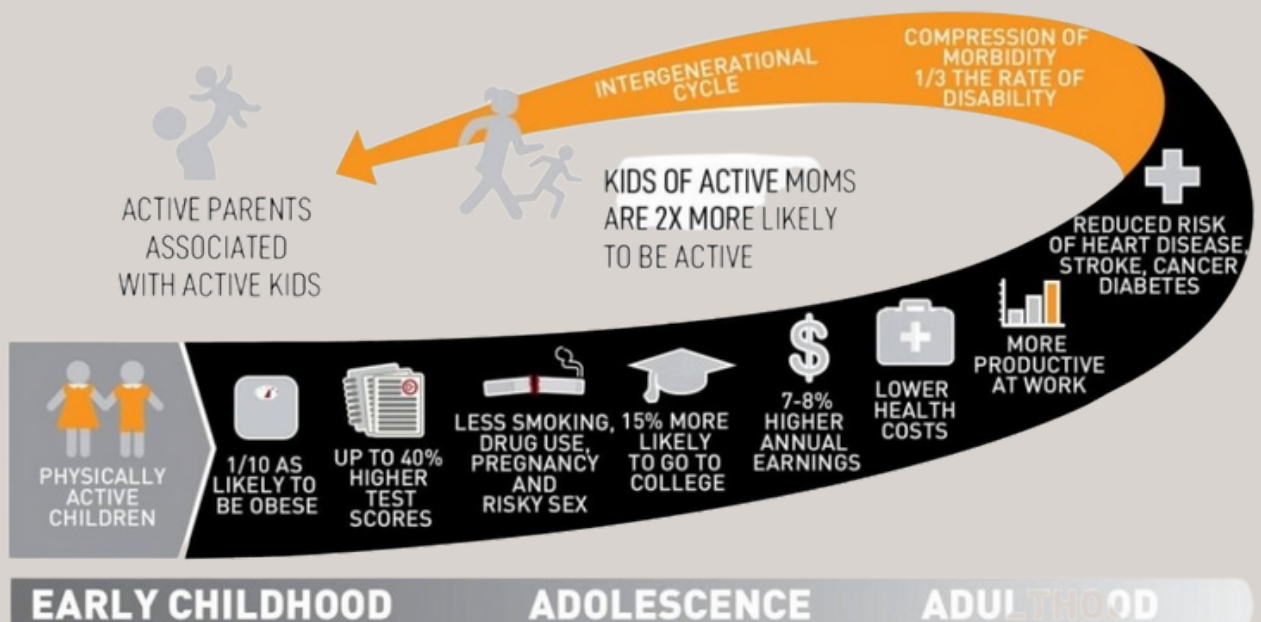

The Problem: Access to high level training and select teams have barriers for those with limited income, limited transportation and limited experience at select level sports & training. Additional barriers also exist for overall sports participation.

The Statistics: Sports participation levels are lower among children from a racial and ethnic minority groups, children whose parents had lower education levels and family income. Further, access to overall sports participation are proven to be challenging for those with chronic medical conditions.

Our Solution: Level the playing field by optimizing equity and inclusion in sports, removing any barriers to high quality sports participation, training or development.

The Effects: Sports matter.

According to this infographic created by the Aspen Institute's Project Play, active kids are more likely to excel in school, be successful at work, have less health issues, and have children who are also active. Sports are an important tool to keep kids active, yet fewer kids are playing and staying in the game.

PLAYING FIELD

What does a level playing field look like?

Level Playing Field was established because we realize not all athletes have access to high quality, state of the art training, development or sports participation.

Barriers to sports training & participation can be financial, lack of transportation, or physical in nature.

Our goal is to level the playing field, fostering opportunity and inclusion in sports training, development and overall sports participation.

How do we Level the Playing Field?

Our programs and activities are aimed at removing barriers for athletes, families and those interested in sports training, development and overall participation. Most importantly, our actions are lead by our mission to level up athletes by creating an all access space where the community can engage in high quality sports, training and development activities.
